Hunting Notes

Good Prospects In Spite of A Late Start

SELDOM has the going been better in Lincolnshire at the opening of the cubbing season as it has this year; nevertheless, owing to the lateness of the harvest it has been of little advantage. Quite a number of useful mornings, however, have been spent in the woodlands to good effect. The number of cubs disturbed are said to be well up to the average and, when properly educated to their responsibilities, give promise of excellent sport when the season proper opens.

There are few changes in the regime of the various packs. Mr. Butcher, one of the joint-Masters of the South Wold, is taking up a jointship with the Grove Hunt, and he has the best wishes for a successful season from his many Lincolnshire friends. The continuance of Mr. Donald Burt and Alderman J. Wightman as joint-Masters, has given South Wold followers much satisfaction.

Mr. Marcus Kimball's acceptance of a joint-Mastership of the Fitzwilliam occasioned considerable regret amongst hunting people in the Aslackby district of the Belvoir country, where, by permission the past two seasons, he had shown consistently good sport with his private pack. Our loss, however, will be the Fitzwilliam gain, and in wishing him every success it is hoped he will pay the district a visit or two during the coming season.

HUNTING has started in the Beaufort country with a good show of cubs all round. Master has unfortunately been laid low due to a minor operation on his knee, but will, we understand, be out soon. Gerald and Ted, meanwhile, have been rattling the woods, but crops are late and it is difficult to move out into the country yet.

The bitches went to see their Master in hospital one day, which was an event in itself.

Welcome to the Breitmeyers at Didmarton. The very sad news about Paddy Leatham was a great shock. A good friend and a grand sportsman, and sadly missed by all his friends in the Beaufort country and elsewhere.

IT was exceedingly bad luck, particularly for the Master, Mr. R. L. Hancock, that the Trinity Foot Beagles' hunting in Coquetdale was interrupted by an outbreak of distemper. Meets ranging from Alnham on the Cheviot slopes to Linden and Longframlington had been arranged. The pack's annual visits to Northumberland date from years before the Boer War, when the late George Carr-Ellison and J. C. Fenwick, being up at Cambridge, invited the hunt to their homes during the vacations.

After World War One the practice was renewed, and in 1928 the sight of "bonny little beagles" on Rimside inspired the Border poet, Will H. Ogilvie, to his lines on them "with Hicks-Beach hunting them and Maldon turning." After another interruption by World War Two (during which the Hertfordshire Yeomanry's beagles had some first-rate days in the same country) the visits were again renewed.

THOUGH delayed by a late harvest, cub-hunting in Northumberland got away to a good start; ironically on some very warm days after an extremely cold summer. Changes there in Masterships since last season have been few, but the Braes of Derwent's joint-Master, Mr. Tony Cowen, whose forebear, William Cowen, re-established that pack in 1854, is now a member of the Masters of Foxhounds Association's committee. Among joint-Masters of the Morpeth, Mr. George Bainbridge has retired, and Col. John Cookson, after an interval of only one season, has rejoined Mr. Eric Steel. Besides being a great-grandson of the hunt's founder and grandson of a former Master, he is a nephew of Col. Edgar Brassey, who was for many seasons a Master of the Heythrop, as a successor to Mr. Albert Brassey, their Master for forty-five years.

WHADDON CHASE hounds started cub-hunting in the middle of August and have been out on two days a week since then. They have found a plentiful supply of foxes, and the number killed is above the average. A particularly good morning was enjoyed at Linford Wood, where two brace were killed. There was another strong litter at Christmas Gorse, and a brace were killed. Excellent sport was found at Liscombe, resulting in one killed, one marked to ground and a brace going away. Lady Villier's Gorse also held plenty of foxes, one of which was killed.
